The graph shows the time (ms) required to draw pixels for a block pattern and a random pattern. The x-axis represents the percentage of pixels drawn, while the y-axis represents the time in milliseconds. The solid line indicates the block pattern, and the dashed line represents the random pattern. As the percentage of pixels drawn increases, the time required also increases, with the block pattern generally increasing at a slower rate than the random pattern.